

City Professionals

Aside from the basic set of services you would normally expect to see associated with municipal government; there are other services that municipalities either need or must provide in order to carry out the people's business. These services tend to be of a highly technical and professional nature and they include such areas as engineering, law, and planning to name a few.

While major cities might have engineers, attorneys, and other professionals on their respective payrolls on a full-time basis because of the large number of projects big cities generally handle; smaller cities, with fewer projects, tend to provide these same services to the community using professionals on a contractual or "as needed" basis, which can be more economical.

The City of Bridgeton provides these necessary professional and technical services through a contractual model with selected firms after soliciting bids or request for proposal from interested qualified firms. Below is a listing of the firms for which the City of Bridgeton has an active contract for a particular technical or professional service.
